92	Let's not tolerate those so called "influencers" with their act. Mostly, kids who aspires to be vloggers/bloggers / influencers are the first one to see their video contents. Medyo alarming na they're trying to make it look na its ok because they paid for the food they ordered so entitled na sila to do whatever they want, steal a condiment for that matter. I have a teenager sir and two other kids whom I allow to explore social media everyday kasi let's admit it, part na sya ng buhay ng kabataan ngayon, and as parent I hope that they would only come across contents that they can learn something good from. However if there would be people like these two who did something ill with their so called contents, and make it look like it's ok to steal, what kind of a world we are showing the kids now? My beloved food industry is already suffering na since last year, and this video was just way too much of abuse para lang magka content.	1/31/2021 1:19 AM

134	We need to educate people who do not understand the industry. The comment section of the Tiktok video is riddled with people who don't understand the concept of food costing and price margins. There was even a comment from a server who says his / her contract with the agency wasn't renewed and that such stunts from customers are insensitive. The content creators replied sarcastically, asking if they lost their jobs because of the condiments. Simpletons don't even understand the compounded effect of abusive acts such as theirs, and that since they do these types of things for views, actually can influence people to do the same. Let us please blow this up because the insult to an industry already beat up by the pandemic does not deserve this from idiots chasing clout.	1/30/2021 8:28 PM

216	We have had many other items being taken from our premises—rolls of bathroom tissues; paper napkins; interfolded towels; hand soap etc. People can be heartless at times. My unsolicited suggestion to the restaurants also is to put the condiments in a seasoning container not in an Open bowl (also for sanitary purpose) to also reduce exposure/contamination esp if it will be served again to another customer. Also reduce temptation to steal by others, just limit the amount given to customers. That was a lot of chilli flakes given to that customer. My personal thoughts. TY	1/30/2021 5:34 PM

279	It's cheap, ignorant, and just shallow. They did it for laughs. And by the looks of it, they dont give a damn about the backlash. I think that's the worst thing, the lack of real remorse and accountability.	1/30/2021 4:59 PM
280	I have a question regarding as to why 'influencers', 'tiktok stars' have to do the most drastic things to gain attention. Sometimes I think that through the creation of sites such as TikTok and social medias, everyone is trying to compete just to get attention and yet do not know the setbacks of their wrong doings and outright reject and deny them. With it, through their fame and worth in the internet, people also believe in their morals and values which is stupid.	1/30/2021 4:59 PM
